

Report for AES Travel Fund Awards to attend EAAE PhD Workshop Bursaries

I want to thank the Agriculture Economics Society for providing me with a bursary that allowed me to attend the 10th PhD workshop of the European Association of Agriculture Economics at the Corvinus University of Budapest in Hungary.

I enjoyed discussing research with PhD colleagues from all other Europe. It was very interesting to see the breadth of the scientific field agriculture economics. These discussions greatly contributed to my motivation to do research.

I particularly enjoyed the workshop because of its unique purpose. It was a good opportunity to share early-stage research or go more into depth of a paper. The feedback that was given by peers and members of the organizing committee was very open and constructive. I presented my article “Commodity Price Risk in Phosphorus Recycling Investments” on the second day of the workshop. Presenting my research in a short format was a good exercise in nailing down the most important parts of the paper.

In addition to meeting colleagues and presenting research, the workshop program included panel sessions with the purpose of preparing us for our future career. I found a session on the nuts and bolts of authoring research papers by Jonathan Brooks and Ian Fraser particularly helpful. In addition to the panel sessions, I participated a mentoring session with Diogo Monteiro, where I gained new insides on possibilities for my future career trajectory.

I want to conclude by thanking the workshop organizers and the Agriculture Economics Society for allowing me to attend this great workshop.

Jan-Philip Uhlemann
Business Economics Group
Wageningen University and Research

Some impressions of the workshop below:

Picture 1: Workshop attendants

Picture 2: My presentation

Picture 1: Me at the workshop location